

Part 1

Principles and concepts for serving the poor

As the crisis of urban poverty deepens, grossly inadequate sanitation and water services to the urban poor remain among the most serious challenges facing the developing world. The need for increased capacity to deliver appropriate and sustained services is urgent. Established authorities need to plan new approaches and engage a wider array of players, in particular local communities themselves.

WSP (2003)